Notes for James Madison Hall:

James enlisted in the 7th Tennessee Calvary, Company D, CSA, early in the Civil War. He was only 22 years old. James was at Columbus, KY on November 8, 1861. While there the rebels were celebrating their victory at Belmont, MO. A large cannon, the "Lady Polk", exploded near him, but he escaped injury. The cannon was named after General Leonidas Polk's wife. James was not at Belmont, but participated in the battle from across the river.

Company D, along with Neely's company, had been detached in October and by March 1862 were at Island No. 10. In this first year of war the troopers camped in relative comfort- at least compared to what was to come later. A-frame tents were available and when they were in one location more than a day, the men would make floors out of planks or palates. Each company had at least two wagons and the men often carried trunks and chairs. Food was in abundance and some of the men brought their servants to cook.

James became a sharpshooter and a scout. He would go behind enemy lines seeking information. According to his son, Charles Henry Hall, James could mount a horse on the fly by grabbing his mane and pulling himself up. This was very helpful in case a fast get-a-way was necessary.

After Island No. 10 was abandoned, James fought at Shiloh and was in other battles in Tennessee and Mississippi. General Nathan Bedford Forrest took command of the 7th TN Calvary in December 1863. In January 1864, James was home to resupply and to scout the Paducah area. He probably married Anna at this time. In February the 7th Calvary regrouped in Western TN. The regiment was sent to Okolona MS where they engaged the Union forces in battle.

On March 25, 1864 the Battle of Paducah was fought. James was not at the Battle of Fort Pillow which followed. The next major battle James saw action in was at Brice's Cross Roads near Tupelo, MS. This battle was on June 10, 1864.
