Shirley Shore also provides the following colorful slice of family history:

This is the story my mother told me concerning how her mother got her name. John Marshall Van Camp was severely wounded in the head 4 days before the end of the Civil War. He was taken to a field hospital in Casinova, Virginia, and he always credited the surgeons there for having saved his life. When Grandma was born, he named her "Arma" in honor of the Army, and "Casinova" in honor of the surgeons who saved his life - choosing to use the location because he did not know the names of the doctors.

I remember going to visit Grandma up on the hill (I have since learned that the name of the road leading to her house is "Slider Run"). I remember sitting on the porch at night and watching millions of fireflies. We talked and sang until it was time for us to go to bed. Grandma had no electricity or running water in the house. It seemed a great adventure to me to live that way. She had a battery operated radio for emergencies. We weren't allowed to listen to it at just any time. I was allowed to listen to one half-hour show per week - and I chose "I Love a Mystery." I still remember sitting in her darkening bedroom, listening spellbound, savoring my weekly "treat."

I remember one time when it hailed huge hailstones - I think they were the proverbial "golf-ball" size - but they seemed bigger than that to me. The noise they made pounding down on grandma's tin roof was deafening. After the storm, we gathered up all the hailstones, and grandma made homemade ice cream. She had an ice cream maker that had a crank that we turned until the ice cream was thick. After Phillip was not allowed to have any milk products, we had another such hail storm, and that time Aunt Blanche made the ice cream. I remember being so upset that Phillip wouldn't be able to have any, but Aunt Blanche told me not to worry and that she would fix it so he didn't feel bad. She gave Phillip a large plate of butter which looked a lot like the ice cream, and he really did not like it. He thought we were all very strange to like such terrible tasting stuff.

Another of my favorite memories of days "on the hill" was the time when all the men got together and went on a turtle hunt. They brought home three washtubs full of snapping turtles. "Teddy" caught a baby snapper and delighted in chasing us all around the yard with it. Aunt Blanche cooked a fantastic meal - I can still see the table - there were two big platters piled high with fried turtle, two big bowls of green beans fresh from the garden cooked with potatoes and bacon, and two big plates of sliced tomatoes - also right out of the garden. There were thick slices of homemade bread, and - of course - the home-churned butter. It's odd, but as I write, I can almost taste that wonderful meal. When I went to visit Uncle Archer just before he died, I remember being so surprised that the dining room was so tiny. It almost seemed that it was too small ever to have held such a magnificent banquet.

I remember Grandma climbing a peach tree to pick peaches, and I was terrified that she would fall. She just laughed at me.

As I said, there was no running water in the house. When the house was built, there was a good well right by the back door. However, Grandfather wanted a deeper well. He and Grandma argued about blasting. She was sure he would ruin the well; he was sure he would make a deeper, better well. She was right. He blasted and the well was lost. The water resurfaced in a spring down over a steep hill from the house. There was a narrow path that Grandma or Aunt Vaughn would walk every day to go to the spring for a bucket of water. I don't know how those two old ladies ever managed to go down that steep little hill when it was icy or muddy. The land around the spring was quite dense with underbrush - berries and the like. This area was fenced in all the way down the mountain until it hit the piece of ground where Aunt Twila & Uncle Brady had their house. I imagine that Grandpa gave them the land when they married, but I do not know this for sure. I do know the fenced land was part of the Van Camp property. Uncle Archer used to graze his cow on this land - now that I think of it, I really wonder how that cow ever found anything to eat - it was so overgrown. Another of my memories of the spring is watching Uncle Archer milk the cow (her name was Pet) down by the spring. He would get under the fence & set up his bucket & stool. My cousins and I would stand on the big rock by the spring, and as Uncle Archer would milk Pet, he would squirt at our open mouths. We thought it was great fun. Memories of the House on the Hill would not be complete without a few snake stories. Mother said that often there would be large blacksnakes draped across the tops of the berry vines in the land down by the spring, and the snakes would watch them as they picked the berries. Grandma never killed blacksnakes unless they were in the henhouse. I remember one very large blacksnake she killed with her hoe. Dad took movie pictures of it. (Unfortunately, all of the old home movies were accidentally ruined.) Grandma often killed copperheads in her cellar. Those snakes were quite prevalent. I remember one of Uncle Archer's dogs - Fannie - who was bitten by a copperhead. Aunt Blanche put a rag soaked with kerosene, I believe, on the wound. At any rate, Fannie recovered from the bite I remember one bright, moonlit night when we were walking back to Grandma's house from Uncle Archer's. Mom suddenly gave a short little skip, bent over, picked up a rock from the side of the road, and threw it - killing a large copperhead that was lying on the warm clay road. I never recalled ever having seen Mama move so fast.

And now, two stories of quite unusual, supernatural events that I want to pass on:

Oddly enough, both of these stories seem to be tied to the outhouse. In the first story, one of the children was very sick (I believe it was Aunt Vaughn). At any rate, she was in very serious condition, and the doctor gave little hope for her recovery, saying that the crisis was near. Grandma went out to the outhouse, and when she started her return to the house and rounded the corner of the chicken coop, she looked up in the sky and saw a bird - this was no ordinary bird. It was an eagle, and it was so large that its wings sheltered the entire house. Grandma said it was the Great Speckled Bird in the Bible. At any rate, Grandma said that at that moment, she knew the crisis had arrived, and she felt a great sense of calm. She wasn't sure if it meant that Aunt Vaughn had passed away or that she had survived the crisis. All Grandma knew was that she had been given a great sense of inner peace. When she got back into the house, the crisis had indeed come, and Aunt Vaughn had begun to recover.

The other story concerns the death of Theodore Van Camp. The night Grandpa was buried, we were all at Grandma's house. Aunt Hallie took David Ray out to the outhouse. As it was pitch dark, she took a flashlight with her. Suddenly, there appeared a small white light that danced around David Ray's head - Aunt Hallie focused the flashlight on it, but it continued to dance.

This went on the entire time they were outside, but when they came back into the house, it disappeared. Aunt Hallie was convinced that it was her father's spirit come back to give a blessing to a grandson.

Everything is gone now. The house was torn down, and all the big trees that once shaded the house and kept it so comfortable on hot summer days have been cut down. There is now a "Party Cabin" there owned by folks from Ohio who come there on weekends. All that is left from my treasure of memories is the row of cherry trees along the road, the wild rose bushes that grow along the lane leading up to the house, the huge rocks in the lane that make it impossible to drive a car up the lane, and the big tree and rock opposite the lane where Margaret Ann, Patty, and I - after a heavy rain - would make mud dishes and put them on the rock to "bake". The road was yellow clay - and after a rain, mud was plentiful. Cars would make deep ruts in the road, and we would dam up the ruts & make lakes. We played right out in the soft, warm rain, damming up the ruts and then jumping into the "lakes" making big splashes. The road is now paved, and no more little ones will ever know the joy of having a whole set of mud dishes, complete with mud pies and cakes.

And these are some of the memories that - for me- will never grown dim.

Notes for Mary Belle Martin:

Mary Belle married her first cousin, as did her own mother.

Shirley Shore writes:

After the birth of her fourth child, Mary Belle suffered from complications of childbirth, and when it became clear to her that she was not going to live, she asked her sister Margaret to take care of her four children and her husband. Margaret promised Mary Belle she would do so. Six months later, Margaret and John Marshall Van Camp were married.

Notes for Mary Belle Martin:

Mary Belle married her first cousin, as did her own mother.

Shirley Shore writes:

After the birth of her fourth child, Mary Belle suffered from complications of childbirth, and when it became clear to her that she was not going to live, she asked her sister Margaret to take care of her four children and her husband. Margaret promised Mary Belle she would do so. Six months later, Margaret and John Marshall Van Camp were married.

With regards to the parentage of Mary Belle Martin, Shirley Shore cites History of the Upper Ohio Valley by Hardesty and "an article about the school at Rosby's Rock".

Notes for John Marshall Van Camp:

John Marshall married his first cousin.

Shirley Shores writes that John Marshall Van Camp was "very quiet", "almost dour in his demeanor".

She includes the following description taken from John Marshall Van Camp's Civil War pension records:

Shirley Shore also provides the following colorful slice of family history:

This is the story my mother told me concerning how her mother got her name. John Marshall Van Camp was severely wounded in the head 4 days before the end of the Civil War. He was taken to a field hospital in Casinova, Virginia, and he always credited the surgeons there for having saved his life. When Grandma was born, he named her "Arma" in honor of the Army, and "Casinova" in honor of the surgeons who saved his life - choosing to use the location because he did not know the names of the doctors.

I remember going to visit Grandma up on the hill (I have since learned that the name of the road leading to her house is "Slider Run"). I remember sitting on the porch at night and watching millions of fireflies. We talked and sang until it was time for us to go to bed. Grandma had no electricity or running water in the house. It seemed a great adventure to me to live that way. She had a battery operated radio for emergencies. We weren't allowed to listen to it at just any time. I was allowed to listen to one half-hour show per week - and I chose "I Love a Mystery." I still remember sitting in her darkening bedroom, listening spellbound, savoring my weekly "treat."

I remember one time when it hailed huge hailstones - I think they were the proverbial "golf-ball" size - but they seemed bigger than that to me. The noise they made pounding down on grandma's tin roof was deafening. After the storm, we gathered up all the hailstones, and grandma made homemade ice cream. She had an ice cream maker that had a crank that we turned until the ice cream was thick. After Phillip was not allowed to have any milk products, we had another such hail storm, and that time Aunt Blanche made the ice cream. I remember being so upset that Phillip wouldn't be able to have any, but Aunt Blanche told me not to worry and that she would fix it so he didn't feel bad. She gave Phillip a large plate of butter which looked a lot like the ice cream, and he really did not like it. He thought we were all very strange to like such terrible tasting stuff.

Another of my favorite memories of days "on the hill" was the time when all the men got together and went on a turtle hunt. They brought home three washtubs full of snapping turtles. "Teddy" caught a baby snapper and delighted in chasing us all around the yard with it. Aunt Blanche cooked a fantastic meal - I can still see the table - there were two big platters piled high with fried turtle, two big bowls of green beans fresh from the garden cooked with potatoes and bacon, and two big plates of sliced tomatoes - also right out of the garden. There were thick slices of homemade bread, and - of course - the home-churned butter. It's odd, but as I write, I can almost taste that wonderful meal. When I went to visit Uncle Archer just before he died, I remember being so surprised that the dining room was so tiny. It almost seemed that it was too small ever to have held such a magnificent banquet.

I remember Grandma climbing a peach tree to pick peaches, and I was terrified that she would fall. She just laughed at me.

As I said, there was no running water in the house. When the house was built, there was a good well right by the back door. However, Grandfather wanted a deeper well. He and Grandma argued about blasting. She was sure he would ruin the well; he was sure he would make a deeper, better well. She was right. He blasted and the well was lost. The water resurfaced in a spring down over a steep hill from the house. There was a narrow path that Grandma or Aunt Vaughn would walk every day to go to the spring for a bucket of water. I don't know how those two old ladies ever managed to go down that steep little hill when it was icy or muddy. The land around the spring was quite dense with underbrush - berries and the like. This area was fenced in all the way down the mountain until it hit the piece of ground where Aunt Twila & Uncle Brady had their house. I imagine that Grandpa gave them the land when they married, but I do not know this for sure. I do know the fenced land was part of the Van Camp property. Uncle Archer used to graze his cow on this land - now that I think of it, I really wonder how that cow ever found anything to eat - it was so overgrown. Another of my memories of the spring is watching Uncle Archer milk the cow (her name was Pet) down by the spring. He would get under the fence & set up his bucket & stool. My cousins and I would stand on the big rock by the spring, and as Uncle Archer would milk Pet, he would squirt at our open mouths. We thought it was great fun. Memories of the House on the Hill would not be complete without a few snake stories. Mother said that often there would be large blacksnakes draped across the tops of the berry vines in the land down by the spring, and the snakes would watch them as they picked the berries. Grandma never killed blacksnakes unless they were in the henhouse. I remember one very large blacksnake she killed with her hoe. Dad took movie pictures of it. (Unfortunately, all of the old home movies were accidentally ruined.) Grandma often killed copperheads in her cellar. Those snakes were quite prevalent. I remember one of Uncle Archer's dogs - Fannie - who was bitten by a copperhead. Aunt Blanche put a rag soaked with kerosene, I believe, on the wound. At any rate, Fannie recovered from the bite I remember one bright, moonlit night when we were walking back to Grandma's house from Uncle Archer's. Mom suddenly gave a short little skip, bent over, picked up a rock from the side of the road, and threw it - killing a large copperhead that was lying on the warm clay road. I never recalled ever having seen Mama move so fast.

And now, two stories of quite unusual, supernatural events that I want to pass on:

Oddly enough, both of these stories seem to be tied to the outhouse. In the first story, one of the children was very sick (I believe it was Aunt Vaughn). At any rate, she was in very serious condition, and the doctor gave little hope for her recovery, saying that the crisis was near. Grandma went out to the outhouse, and when she started her return to the house and rounded the corner of the chicken coop, she looked up in the sky and saw a bird - this was no ordinary bird. It was an eagle, and it was so large that its wings sheltered the entire house. Grandma said it was the Great Speckled Bird in the Bible. At any rate, Grandma said that at that moment, she knew the crisis had arrived, and she felt a great sense of calm. She wasn't sure if it meant that Aunt Vaughn had passed away or that she had survived the crisis. All Grandma knew was that she had been given a great sense of inner peace. When she got back into the house, the crisis had indeed come, and Aunt Vaughn had begun to recover.

The other story concerns the death of Theodore Van Camp. The night Grandpa was buried, we were all at Grandma's house. Aunt Hallie took David Ray out to the outhouse. As it was pitch dark, she took a flashlight with her. Suddenly, there appeared a small white light that danced around David Ray's head - Aunt Hallie focused the flashlight on it, but it continued to dance.

This went on the entire time they were outside, but when they came back into the house, it disappeared. Aunt Hallie was convinced that it was her father's spirit come back to give a blessing to a grandson.

Everything is gone now. The house was torn down, and all the big trees that once shaded the house and kept it so comfortable on hot summer days have been cut down. There is now a "Party Cabin" there owned by folks from Ohio who come there on weekends. All that is left from my treasure of memories is the row of cherry trees along the road, the wild rose bushes that grow along the lane leading up to the house, the huge rocks in the lane that make it impossible to drive a car up the lane, and the big tree and rock opposite the lane where Margaret Ann, Patty, and I - after a heavy rain - would make mud dishes and put them on the rock to "bake". The road was yellow clay - and after a rain, mud was plentiful. Cars would make deep ruts in the road, and we would dam up the ruts & make lakes. We played right out in the soft, warm rain, damming up the ruts and then jumping into the "lakes" making big splashes. The road is now paved, and no more little ones will ever know the joy of having a whole set of mud dishes, complete with mud pies and cakes.

And these are some of the memories that - for me- will never grown dim.
