Notes for LAURA ELMINA LENTS:

From The Hubbard Fuller and Samuel C. Smith Genealogies:

Laura Elmina Lents, 4th child of Cordelia S. and George W. Lents, revives memories as related by her parents, of the families mode of living as children and conditions as they were long ago. These conditions certainly not as to day (1963) with all of our modern conveniences.

Laura's parents came to Iowa shortly after their marriage in 1868, traveling by an Oxen drawn covered wagon and settled on a parcel of unimproved land near Fontanelle, Adair Co., Iowa, a small settlement with few homes and one General Store.

Their first problems were to clear the land for cultivation and the building of a home and outbuildings. Wood was used for fuel and for cooking. Coal was available but expensive. A well had to be drilled also to supply them with water and drawn by a windlass. Candles and oil were used for lighting.

In the fall there was butchering to be done and the curing of the meat to last most of the winter, the vegetables were placed in a root cellar near the house. Wheat and corn were ground for bread.

The cost of living was very high because of the transportation of all other supplies. The nearest railroad was at Casey, Iowa some miles away. It was a long way in those days travelling cross country on unmarked roads in all kinds of weather.

Their mail man came by horse-back from Corning, Iowa, a long trip and he often found it necessary to stay over night in the home of a farmer en route.

There were some Indians in the area, some came to the door asking for food, especially white flour. If they were given corn meal, they either refused it or threw it on the ground. Not very friendly, seems to me.

Laura's father served in the Civil War, upon discharge he was given the gun he carried. It was larger than the rifle and quite heavy. He made his own bullet, about the size of a large pea, these were made by melting lead in a long handled dipper over a fire, poured into a mold. An old cow horn was used to keep gun powder in to be used with the ball. The gun was always cleaned after using and placed where the children couldn't reach it.

Fontanelle was formally the county seat (Adair), but was moved to Greenfield about seven miles east, leaving the old court house vacant. It was remodeled and used for a school, this is where the Lents children attended school. The teachers received $26 per month, out of this she paid for room and board of $1.50 per week. As the years passed, living conditions improved.
