Notes for Heinrich Lorenz STIEBELING:

It is curious why with all these young children (six aged 4-20 upon Catherine's death) Lorenz did not remarry in Germany or America. After emigrating in 1869, Lorenz first lived in the West Farms area of th Bronx where he worked in the "skin factory". He stayed in New York, as Lorenz' younger brother Georg, a doctor, had been living there since the 1850's. The family must have had a grand reunion in NY. The children moved up from DC and Baltimore, probably to meet the ship, and then lived together in the Brionx. Lorenz had not seen Herrmann for 15 years, and Hermann is now 29! Hermann is the first to move back to Washington, D.C. in 1874 with 14 year old Elizabeth. William follows in 1878, then Sophia, and finally Lorenz in 1887. Lorenz was a Hostler in D.C. at 809 Maryland Avenue, NE in 1889. In 1890 he moved in with Charles and Elizabeth prior to his death.

Cause of Death (Facts Pg): Peritonitis
Emigration: 1869, Arrived in Port of New York on the SS Hermann
Occupation: Laborer, leather, hostler

Notes for Catherine Henriette RUEB:

Catherine married Lorenz four months after the birth of their first child, which was not uncommon in Germany in those days, How hard it must have been for Catherine to let her oldest son emigrate with her brother (Conrad Rueb) and his family in 1854 when Hermann was only 14 - never to see him again! Perhaps the rest of the family had planned to join up soon after, but plans were delayed during the Civil War (Hermann fought for the Union, not a popular position in the District of Columbia, or perhaps Catherine or daughter Emma was ill. The rest of the family waited until after Catherine died - Edward, Maria, and William emigrated in 1865, and Lorenz followed in 1869 with Riecke (Fredericka), and Elizabeth. Son Hermann and his wife Anna (childless) treated Elizabeth like a daughter - Elizabeth had been four when Catherine died.
