Generation No. 1

1. John<sup>4</sup> Trueblood (Arnold<sup>3</sup>, John<sup>2</sup>, Thomas<sup>1</sup>)<sup>1</sup> was born 04 Oct 1654 in Beckingham, Lincolnshire, England, and died 17 May 1692 in Albemarle, Pasquotank, North Carolina/Pasquotank Co., NC<sup>1</sup>. He married Agnes Fisher 31 May 1679 in Devonshire Meeting House, London, England, daughter of Thomas Fisher and Agnes Baker. She was born 01 Jan 1655/56 in Ulverstone, Lancashire, England, and died 15 Sep 1692 in Albemarle Co. (Perquimans Co), North Carolina<sup>2</sup>.

Notes for John Trueblood:

John was the son of either Arnold (Amos) of Beckingham and Mary, or William of Cripplegate and Hannah (Anna) Harding.

The Truebloods and Symons were closely tied in NC. The children of the first Trueblood family in America (John & Agnes) were raised by the Symons family when both parents died in 1692. Their sons John and Amos were both very young. The Miriam listed above is a descendant of Amos Trueblood thru Josiah and then William. The name Symons in IN was sometimes spelled Simmons.

According to what I have, John Trueblood b. 1660, d. 1692 arrived in NC with his wife, Agnes Fisher, b. 1656, d. 1692. They evidently arrived in 1692 and both died shortly after their arrival. Their sons are listed as Mary b. 1684, Elizabeth, b. 1687, John, b. 1689, d. 1734, and Amos, b. 1692, d. 12-20-1759.

English-American Truebloods share common ancestry -- John Trueblood of Shoreditch & his wife, Agnes Fisher. We also shared a common Quaker heritage until the mid-1800's when the pressures of the Civil War & the lure of competing evangelistic denominations led many Trueblood's out of the Society of Friends. This heritage provided meticulous records for future genealogists. Our English ancestry has been less certain. Bula Trueblood Watson in her landmark study of the family reduced the candidates for John's father to two possibilities -- William, a prosperous baker of the Cripplegate district of London, & Arnold, a Quaker who died for his beliefs in Lincoln Castle.

The current hypothesis is that John Trueblood's parents were William and Hannah Harding Trueblood. The basis for this theory seems to be a combination of the London residence & records of a son named John born to them. There is a potential problem with this antecedent. John's Anglican christening could have easily been alleviated with a later conversion.

However, a John Trueblood of London of the appropriate generation of William's son marries an Ann & has a succession of children all baptized Anglican in Saint Martin-Vintry Parish beginning about 1681. It would seem likely that this John is actually William's son.

The most logical antecedents for our John would appear to lie in Lincolnshire where the name appears to have originated, been most numerous, and had definite Quaker connections. The problem has always been linking John with Lincolnshire. Wendy Parkinson, an English researcher, has found a very significant entry in the Lincolnshire archives

LINCOLNSHIRE ARCHIVES - 2 BRACE 3/40 - 4.057

It is desired that Friends of Beckingham Meeting do enquire into the clearness and honest walking of John Trueblood: and accordingly send a Certificate to Friends at London that he may proceed in Marriage according to Truth

This entry from Fulbeck Monthly Meeting held 4/5/1679 would seem to link our John, who married Agnes Fisher the following month 5/31/1679, to Lincolnshire -- specifically Beckingham. Arnold Trueblood of Beckingham, the Quaker martyr of Lincoln Castle, had a son John born 10/4/1654. We know he and his wife, Mary, had two other children, William (6/10/1658) & Elizabeth, who later married George Good in a Quaker ceremony. After Arnold's death, Mary, his widow, remarried William Burditt on 3/31/1660. . William Burditt's will acknowledges his stepchildren John, Elizabeth, & Mary.

LINCOLNSHIRE ARCHIVES WILL – LCC 1679/100

Will of William Burditt of Beckingham mentions the children of my dear wife Mary, Elizabeth Trueblood, John Trueblood and William Trueblood.

Another Quaker entry from Broughton Monthly Meeting dated 9/1/1683 is likewise interesting

LINCOLNSHIRE ARCHIVES - 2 BRACE 3/40 – 4.096

Ten Shillings wch: was given to the pore by John Trueblood was brought to this Meeting.

Significantly this contribution was forwarded from elsewhere. Was our John forwarding a contribution from North Carolina?

Parish records of Coleby list Arnold's birth & father:

Arnall Trueblood, son of John Trueblood, Blacksmith, on ?/8/1618

In my opinion, this is a very significant development in establishing a connection between John Trueblood & Lincolnshire. It also establishes a definite link with the early Quaker Church. More research needs to be done. I would welcome further information to either refute or further this theory.

Unlike many other seventeenth-century colonists, the Truebloods came to Carolina as free men. They were clearly entitled to own land and slaves, and to practice their religion. John Trueblood of Shoreditch does not seem to have been penalized for his membership in the Society of Friends, seemingly having means to transport himself and his wife to Carolina, and to begin a new life. He received a large grant of land - 600 acres - relatively early, which, since its transfer was still pending at the time of his death in 1692, passed to his two sons. They, in turn, quickly accumulated more land, but as to how John of Shoreditch came to receive this land is not really known. Family legend says that John of Shoreditch was a protege of the Duke of Albemarle, one of the Lord Proprietors of Carolina, and this might account for the family's presence in Albemarle Province and its receipt of relatively-large grants of land. Another explanation could be that John of Shoreditch could have played a large part in bringing other colonists to the New World, which in turn would entitle him to land. How and why are not truly known.

Whatever the explanation, it is evident that John and his sons and grandsons soon prospered in Albemarle. That they remained faithful to Carolina for generations is equally evident, for the first United States census, that of 1790, lists Truebloods only in that state. After 1790, however, that situation was to change, with the rise of the slavery issue and the lure of new lands to the west. It must also be noted that most members of the first four generations of Truebloods in Carolina continued to be Quakers. This circumstance was also to change after 1790.

It is amazing how our John of Shoreditch created the beginning of the Trueblood's in America. Only four surviving children were born in the Carolinas, Mary b 1684, Elizabeth b 1687, John b 1689, and Amos b 1692. John and Agnes did not survive the hardships of the new land for long, both died in 1692, thus leaving their children as orphans at a very early age. Mary, the eldest, being eight and Amos, the youngest, being not quite a year old. As stated in the will of John:

. . .and lastly I do appoint and ordain in case my wife should die without making an Will, that my appointed Thomas Symons and Jeremiah Symons to take my estate into their possession and care for the good of my children, and bring them up according to their discretion, as witness my hand. . .

Exactly when or where John and Agnes landed in the new land is not known. Between their marriage in 1679 and the birth of the child born in Albemarle in 1684, nothing is known. It has been pointed out by Gordon Trueblood, that ocean going vessels of the 1600's could not pass through the Albemarle Sound to the Pasquotank River to reach Albemarle Precinct. The Albemarle Sound was much too shallow and the draft of the ocean going vessels of that era was too deep. The first record of an ocean going vessel of that era passing through the Albemarle Sound dates back to around 1706. John and Agnes may have first gone to Barbados, as did many of the early Quaker's, then on to North Carolina by a smaller ship or they may have disembarked in New England, which was very hostile to Quaker's (Mary Fisher was an early Quaker "preacher" to New England, and could have been related to Agnes Fisher, John Trueblood's wife, in some fashion). Also the fact that John and Agnes left their children in the care of Thomas and Jeremiah Symonds is also important because they too were Quakers who came from the New England area. Also living in the Albemarle Precinct at that time were John Phillips and his wife, who were also Quakers from New England, so it is very possible that they did in fact land in New England rather than Barbados, but until some record is found of where they landed or what ship they sailed on, it can not be known for sure. Also another interesting point is that having been married in 1679, it is very likely that more children were born to them besides the four recorded children we know about, whereas the first is shown as being born in 1684. This is 4 years after their marriage. Chances are very likely that there could have been more children bore to them, but perished soon after. Again until more records are found to back up this theory, it is really not known for sure.

Marietta National Cemetery
Marietta, Cobb County, Georgia

Trueblood, Jonathan, d. 08/07/1864, PVT G BAT 18 USI, Orig Bur Jonesboro Ga, Plot: E6164

Marietta National Cemetery is located in Cobb County, one block off the main street of Marietta, in central Georgia. Marietta was established as early as 1824 with a small cluster of homes near the Cherokee town of Kennesaw. In 1832, the state of Georgia formed 10 counties from what had been Cherokee lands. Cobb County, the home of Marietta, was named for Tomas Willis Cobb, U.S. Representative, U.S. Senator and Supreme Court Judge. In 1837, the Georgia Gazetteer reported that the city of Marietta was named for Judge Cobb's wife. The Georgia legislature formally recognized the town in December 1834, but by that time it was already a sizeable community.

During the Civil War, forces under the command of General William Tecumseh Sherman moved in and occupied the town. For the next five months, federal troops held the city under siege. In November 1864, troops commanded by Union General Hugh Kilpatrick set the town on fire before embarking on their infamous "March to the Sea."

Originally known as the Marietta and Atlanta National Cemetery, the Marietta National Cemetery was established in 1866 to provide a suitable resting place for the nearly 10,000 Union dead from Sherman's Atlanta Campaign. Henry Cole, a local merchant who remained loyal to the Union throughout the war, offered land for a burial ground for both Union and Confederate dead. His hope was that by honoring those who had fallen together, others might learn to live in peace. Unfortunately, both sides clung to their bitterness and neither North nor South would accept Cole's offer toward reconciliation. When this effort failed, 24 acres were offered to General George H. Thomas for use of a national cemetery. In 1867 a second offer of land by Cole was accepted and a subsequent purchase of additional acreage in 1870 brought the cemetery to its present size of a little over 23 acres.

The cemetery site was, at one time, the proposed location of the capital of the Confederate States of America. The same Henry Cole who had attempted to donate his land for the national cemetery had refused an offer of $50,000 for the property because he "expected to put it to a better purpose." In recognition of Cole's gift, the government made express provision that a burial plat be set-aside for members of his family. Cole died April 18, 1875, and was buried in what is now called the Cole Plot.

Daniel Webster Cole, son of the land donor, lived for many years in the family home across the street from the cemetery. A construction engineer, he drew the first map of the cemetery, which was later the basis for official layouts. The original sections of the cemetery were arranged in concentric circles around a flagstaff with paths radiating through the circles. The first interments were the remains of soldiers who had been buried where they fell. A granite memorial arch at the cemetery gate is inscribed: "Here rest the remains of 10,312 Officers and Soldiers who died in defense of the Union 1861-1865." Marietta National Cemetery was laid out by Union Army Chaplain Thomas B. Van Horne, who also laid out the Chattanooga National Cemetery. One of the national cemeteries constructed between 1861-1869, the design for Marietta National Cemetery was the most ornate and elaborate of its era.

Marietta National Cemetery was placed on the National Register of Historic Places on Sept. 18, 1998.

Monuments and Memorials

Marietta National Cemetery contains one of five surviving original entry arches that were installed at national cemeteries during the post-Civil War period. Marietta's entry arch was constructed in 1883. The remaining three archways are located at Chattanooga (1868), Nashville (1870), and Rock Island (1870) National Cemeteries.

- 54 v. Sanford Trueblood, born 09 Mar 1857 in Michigan; died Abt. 1925 in Escanaba, Delta, MI<sup>23</sup>.

Notes for Sanford Trueblood:

From "FOUR ISLANDS: A History of Detroit, Rock, St. Martins, and Washington Islands" by Raymond E. McDonald (pp. 91-94):

Sanford Trueblood came to Washington Island in 1908. Charlie McDonald often went to Escanaba with the tug "Stewart Edward," and on one of these trips Sanford came down to the dock to visit him.

They had been friends for many years, in fact they had been on St. Martins Island in the 1870's and 80's, so they had know each other for many years. Sanford grew up on St. Martins Island, attended school there, and was most likely born there. He had two brothers, George and Asa, who lived near Escanaba.

Sanford decided he would come back in the tug to Washington Island and work on the "Stewart Edward" for a while. In the meantime, he decided to build himself a home. Not owning any land, he got permission from W. W. Bradshaw, an old Civil War veteran and bachelor, who was probably glad to have a neighbor nearby. After getting permission from Mr. Bradshaw (nothing signed, just a handshake), he started building and finished it in due time. This is the property now know as Kindgren's cottages, in Jackson harbor, owned by Jack Lindgren.

The home that was built is on the northeast corner of this property, right near the water. Sanford was not a bad carpenter, and he did a fair job on his house. I remember when he built it. He used sawdust for insulation. This house was built in 1909 and it is still in use.

Sanford worked some during the summer at carpentry, and he would work on a fish tug occasionally, but never too steady. He built himself a sixteen-foot skiff and put in a spar and center board. It had new white sails. He painted her white with a bright red trim and named her "Mamie." He was not too ambitious in spite of the work he did.

His philosophy was to take life on the easier side. He was never in a hurry-- no rush. He believed in enjoying life. He was a friendly, harmless man with no enemies. He would probably find it rather difficult to pursue that kind of life today.

Sanford was never prepared very well for the long winters we had. He never made much money. Wages were low, and by not working too steady, he did not accumulate much for winter. He ran short of food and money at about the same time during those long winters, and he was really hungry at times.

I remember one winter he was at our place for breakfast for about two months. He came early and was always asked if he would take some breakfast. His answer was always "don't mind if I do."

Having know him so long, and liking him, my folks could not see him going hungry. There was no welfare in those days.

He was a man of good habits. He drank very little, if any. I have a picture of him when he was young. He was a very handsome man.

Just before Christmas one year he got an invitation for Christmas dinner from the Thomas Launders family. He really enjoyed those invitations to a good meal.

On Christmas morning he got all dressed up for the occasion. He liked to dress well, and he was a neat man. It was a bright, crisp morning, and it was cold. He had about five miles to wak, so he stepped right out happy as a lark. He took a shortcut through the woods for about two miles, then had good going as the logging crews had been working in the woods, and hauling out logs had made the road excellent.

On arriving at the home of the Launders, who invited him for dinner, he was greeted at the door and welcomed in. After a few minutes of conversation, he thanked them for the invitation and told them how much he appreciated it.

The answer he received really took the wind out of his sails. They told him they had not sent any invitaion. But he was asked to stay and have dinner with them, and of course, he accepted and enjoyed a fine dinner.

No one ever found out who sent him the invitation, but one man was suspected. He was a bachelor, also, and quite a prankster. Sanford did not care who wrote it because he came out the winner.

He was quite a story teller, also. Most of his stories were about something that happened on St. Martins Island thirty or forty years before. He always started his story with "Me and my brother George..." and then would go on from there. I believe he must have invented the term 'embellish.'

He finally decided to go back to Escanaba to live in about 1914. We never saw much of him after that. A few times he came down to the dock when the tug would be there. He told us he had gotten married. That was the first time, and he was not a young man anymore.

We all missed him in Jackson Harbor. The last we heard, he had passed away around 1925 in Escanaba.

Discharged at Ft. Knox, KY on 30 January 1919.

Re-enlisted 3 January 1923 at Chicago, IL and was discharged 2 January 1926 at Ft. Sheridan, IL.

The following is a statement he submitted to the Veterans Administration on 5 Nov. 1956 in support of his application for a pension:

"In June of 1918 I was attached to the 315th Cavalry, Troop A, under the command of a Captain Bailey. This unit was stationed at Fort E. A. Russell, Cheyenne, Wyoming, for the purpose of breaking horses to be used by the 71st Field Artillery of the 315th Cavalry. While engaged in this work a Private by the name of Case was killed by a certain horse. On the following day I was asked to continue the training of this horse. During this training I was thrown and trampled by the horse." (He claimed that the injuries sustained at this time contributed to his later medical problems, including cancer.)

74. Door County Advocate- Obituary, 9 July 1914, George Trueblood, a pioneer of Delta county, passed away Wednesday night, June 24th, at his hime in Escanaba, Mich., after an illness of several weeks. Death was caused by a growth that developed on the back of the head, which could not be removed. Death was quite sudden and unexpected, although it was known by members of the family that he could not recover. Mr. Trueblood was 61 years of age, having been born at Nahma, and had been a resident of Delta county all his life. He is survived by his wife and one daughter, Miss Essie Trueblood. The funeral took place from the family residence at Pine Ridge on Saturday afternoon, June 27th, Rev. King D. Beach, pastor of the First Methodist church of Escanaba, officiating. The remains were interred at Lakeview cemetary, in that city. Mr. Trueblood had many acquaintances in the northern part of Door county, being a brother-in-law to Lyman Greenwood, and having visited here on numerous occasions.
